

Examination Committee ID objection information

You can submit an objection if you believe the course assessment or the competence assessment has not been performed according to the examination regulations.

Please follow this procedure:

1. You first need to contact the first lecturer/examiner involved in order to ask for an explanation of the grade or verdict.
2. If you are still in disagreement with the result, contact your academic advisor, who will help you with your objection. Discuss your case with the academic advisor obtain feedback on your objection. In general we advise you to explain what happened, identify the examination regulation which you believe has not been adhered to and how this regulation is relevant in your particular case.
3. Feedback will only be given once so you need to make sure to use this feedback effectively. Objections that not have been discussed with an academic advisor and objections that lack information will not be taken into consideration by the Examination Committee meeting.

Please use the EC Objection form (on the Forms and Files page) and send the final objection to the Examination Committee. You can find the contact information of the EC on the Contact page or in the objection form.

1. Objection course assessment

If you disagree with the result of a course assessment you first need to contact the lecturer so he/she can explain to you how you were graded. If you still disagree with the lecturer, you can submit an objection to the Examination Committee. Your objection should concisely give the arguments which support your point of view. You are recommended to refer to relevant articles in the examination regulations. The Examination Committee will request input from your lecturer in order to have all necessary information and will discuss your objection during their meeting.

2. Objection competence assessment

If you disagree with the verdict of a competence assessment you need to contact the first examiner so he/she can explain to you how you were graded. If you still disagree with the first examiner, you can submit an objection. Your objection should concisely give the arguments which support your point of view. You are recommended to refer to relevant articles in the examination regulations. The Examination Committee will request input from your first examiner before discussing your objection in their meeting.

3. Objection Binding Study Recommendation

If you disagree with the intention to negative Binding Study Recommendation (BSR) you receive as a first-year student in July, you can submit an objection to the Examination Committee. Since the Binding Study Recommendation is a consequence of the results you have obtained during your studies, it is possible that you need to submit an objection to a course assessment or a competence assessment as well. You can find more information on the Binding Study Recommendation here. Personal circumstances can only be taken into account if there are reported to the academic advisor within 20 working days after the occurrence, and if these are subsequently discussed with the ESA Student Counsellor.
